U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services

Non-Precedent Decision of the Administrative Appeals Office

MATTER OF C-F-P-, INC.

DATE: MAR. 29, 2017

APPEAL OF TEXAS SERVICE CENTER DECISION

PETITION: FORM I-140, IMMIGRANT PETITION FOR ALIEN WORKER

The Petitioner, a poultry business, seeks to employ the Beneficiary as a production line worker. It requests classification of the Beneficiary as an unskilled worker under the third preference immigrant classification. See Immigration and Nationality Act (the Act) section 203(b)(3)(A)(iii), 8 U.S.C. § 1152(b)(3)(A)(iii). This employment-based immigrant classification allows a U.S. employer to sponsor a foreign national for lawful permanent resident status to work in a position that requires less than 2 years of training or experience.

The Director of the Texas Service Center denied the visa petition, finding that the record did not establish that the Beneficiary had met the drug screening and physical assessment requirements of the labor certification as of the petition's priority date and that the Beneficiary was, therefore, not qualified for the offered position.

The matter is now before us on appeal. The Petitioner contends that the Director erred in denying the petition, stating that requiring it to conduct the above drug screening and physical assessment as of the visa petition's priority date is unreasonable. Alternatively, the Petitioner asserts that the evidence establishes that the Beneficiary met the requirements of the labor certification as of the visa petition's priority date.

Upon de novo review, we will dismiss the appeal.

I. LAW

Employment-based immigration is generally a three-step process. First, an employer must obtain an approved ETA Form 9089, Application for Permanent Employment Certification (labor certification) from the U.S. Department of Labor (DOL). See section 212(a)(5)(A)(i) of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(5)(A)(i). Next, the employer may file an immigrant visa petition with U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS). See section 204 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1154. Finally, if USCIS approves the immigrant visa petitioner, the foreign national must apply for an immigrant visa abroad or, if eligible, adjustment of status in the United States. See section 245 of the Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1255.

As required by statute, a labor certification, approved by the DOL, accompanies the petition. By approving the labor certification, the DOL certifies that there are insufficient U.S. workers who are able, willing, qualified, and available for the offered position. Section 212(a)(5)(A)(i)(I) of the Act. The DOL also certifies that the employment of a foreign national in the position will not adversely affect the wages and working conditions of domestic workers similarly employed. Section 212(a)(5)(A)(i)(II) of the Act.

In visa petition proceedings, USCIS determines whether a foreign national meets the job requirements specified in the underlying labor certification and the requirements of the requested immigrant classification. See section 204(b) of the Act (stating that USCIS must approve a petition if the facts stated in it are true and the foreign national is eligible for the requested preference classification); see also, e.g., Tongatapu Woodcraft Haw., Ltd. v. Feldman, 736 F.2d 1305, 1309 (9th Cir. 1984); Madany v. Smith, 696 F.2d 1008, 1012-13 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (both holding that USCIS has authority to make preference classification decisions).

A petitioner must establish the elements for the approval of the petition at the time the priority date is established and continuing until the beneficiary obtains lawful permanent residence. See 8 C.F.R. §§ 204.5(g)(2), 103.2(b)(1), (12); see also Matter of Wing's Tea House, 16 I&N Dec. 158, 159 (Acting Reg'l Comm'r 1977); Matter of Katigbak, 14 I&N Dec. 45, 49 (Reg'l Comm'r 1971). The priority date of a petition is the date that the DOL accepts the labor certification for processing. See 8 C.F.R. § 204.5(d).

II. ANALYSIS

To establish that a beneficiary is qualified to perform the duties of an offered position, a petitioner must demonstrate that a beneficiary has met all of the requirements set forth in the labor certification by the priority date of the petition.[1] In evaluating the job offer portion of the labor certification to determine the required qualifications for the position, USCIS may not ignore a term of the labor certification, nor may it impose additional requirements.[2]

In the present matter, the job offer portion of the labor certification, Part H, reflects no education, training, or experience requirements for the offered position. The only qualifications stated for the position are set forth in Part H.14, as follows: "[d]rug screening and physical assessment to stand long time and repetitive hand motion required. Age 18 and above."

The initial filing did not contain evidence that the Beneficiary met the requirements stated in Part H.14, so the Director issued a request for evidence to the Petitioner, asking for evidence establishing that the Beneficiary had met the requirements of a drug screening and physical assessment, as of the visa petition's priority date, May 14, 2014.

---

[1] See 8 C.F.R. §§ 103.2(b)(1), (12); 8 C.F.R. § 204.5(l)(3)(ii)(A); see Matter of Wing's Tea House, 16 I&N Dec. at 159; Matter of Katigbak, 14 I&N Dec. at 49.

[2] See Madany v. Smith, 696 F.2d at 1008; K.R.K. Irvine, Inc. v. Landon, 699 F.2d 1006 (9th Cir. 1983); Stewart Infra-Red Commissary of Massachusetts, Inc. v. Coomey, 661 F.2d 1 (1st Cir. 1981).

In response, the Petitioner acknowledged that a drug screening and physical assessment were listed in Part H.14 of the labor certification as special requirements for the offered position, but maintained that they were not requirements for employment, but intended only to promote a safe working environment. As further proof that these requirements were not job requirements, the Petitioner noted that its drug screenings and physical assessments were performed only after an applicant had been offered employment. It further stated that its practice of requiring newly hired employees to pass a drug test and a physical assessment was known to the which assisted it with its local recruitment efforts. In support of this claim, the Petitioner submitted a letter from who states that it is his understanding that the Petitioner performs drug tests and physical assessments of new employees before they begin work.

Having made these arguments, the Petitioner, nevertheless, submitted the results of a January 15, 2016, drug test reflecting that the Beneficiary was drug-free. It also provided the results of a physical examination of the Beneficiary, conducted on January 15, 2016, which found she was capable of performing work that required her to stand for long periods of time and perform repetitive hand motions. The Petitioner further submitted January 6, 2016, and January 7, 2016, criminal background checks of the Beneficiary performed by the Pennsylvania State Police and the Korean National Policy Agency respectively, which reflect that she has no criminal history. This evidence, the Petitioner maintained, established, by a preponderance of evidence, that the Beneficiary would have satisfied the requirements of Part H.14 of the labor certification as of the priority date, even though the tests themselves had not yet been conducted. Although he noted the Petitioner's submission of the above documentation, the Director concluded that, as the requirements in Part H.14 of the labor certification had not been met as of the petition's priority date, the Beneficiary was not qualified for the offered position.

On appeal, the Petitioner again contends that the drug screenings and physical assessments required of its new employees are not job requirements. Instead, it describes them as the final step in its hiring process, as they are not conducted until after a job offer has been made to an applicant. The Petitioner further asserts that, unlike a beneficiary's education and work experience, which do not change after a labor certification is filed, the results of the drug screening and physical assessment required by Part H.14 of the labor certification could well alter over the course of the employment-based immigrant visa process. It, therefore, maintains that requiring the Beneficiary to have undergone a drug screening and a physical assessment of her ability to perform the duties of the offered position prior to the filing of the labor certification, as is the case with education and employment experience, is "unreasonable."

We note, however, that in cases before the Board of Alien Labor Certification Appeals (BALCA) where employers have maintained that pre-employment screening is simply part of their hiring process, BALCA has found otherwise, concluding that such screening is a job requirement that must be listed on a labor certification.[3] See Matter of Aetna Life Insurance Company, 2012-PER-03011

[3] While we are not bound by BALCA decisions, we, nevertheless, may take note of the reasoning in such decisions when considering issues that arise in the employment-based immigrant visa process.

(BALCA Dec. 14, 2016); see also Matter of 421 S. 2nd Street Enterprises, 2012-PER-00696 (BALCA Aug. 28, 2013); Matter of Vetri 640 Corp., 2011-PER-02537 (BALCA Feb. 15. 2013); Matter of Yiannis Electric, Inc., 2011-PER-00112 (BALCA Feb. 15, 2012); Matter of Noll Pallet & Lumber, 2009-PER-00082 (BALCA Dec. 16, 2009). Based on this reasoning, we find the drug screening and physical assessment requirements listed by the Petitioner in Part H.14 of the labor certification to be job requirements, which must have been met by the Beneficiary as of the visa petition's May 14, 2014, priority date.

The Petitioner alternately asserts that the results of the drug tests, physical assessment and criminal background checks that have been submitted for the record in this matter are sufficient to demonstrate that the Beneficiary met the requirements of the labor certification as of the petition's May 14, 2014, priority date. The Petitioner maintains that, although performed subsequent to the visa petition's priority date, the Beneficiary's drug tests and physical examination establish that it is more likely than not that she was also drug-free and physically able to perform the offered position's duties at the time it filed the labor certification with the DOL. It asserts that, as this evidence establishes the Beneficiary's eligibility for the offered position by a preponderance of evidence, the Director erred in denying the visa petition.

When determining whether a beneficiary is eligible for a preference immigrant visa, we may not ignore a term of the labor certification, nor may we impose additional requirements. Madany v. Smith, 696 F.2d at 1012-1013. We must examine "the language of the labor certification job requirements" in order to determine what the job requires. Id. The only rational manner by which USCIS can be expected to interpret the meaning of terms used to describe the requirements of a job in a labor certification is to examine the certified job offer exactly as it is completed by the prospective employer. See Rosedale Linden Park Company v. Smith, 595 F. Supp. 829, 833 (D.D.C. 1984) (emphasis added).

We read the requirements of a labor certification as written. While the purpose of the Petitioner's drug screening test may be a drug-free employee and its physical assessment, a worker capable of performing the duties of the offered position, those are not the requirements the Petitioner stated in Part H.14 of the labor certification. Rather, Part H.14 reflects the Petitioner's requirements for the job opportunity as a drug screening test and a physical assessment of a job applicant's ability to stand for long periods of time and perform repetitive hand motions, which, pursuant to regulation, must be met as of the visa petition's May 14, 2014, priority date. Here, the drug tests and physical assessment of the Beneficiary that have been submitted by the Petitioner were conducted subsequent to the petition's priority date. Therefore, they do not meet the requirements of the labor certification.

As the record does not demonstrate that the Beneficiary was screened for drugs and physically assessed to determine her ability to perform the duties of the job opportunity prior to the priority date, it does not establish that she is qualified for the offered position.

III. CONCLUSION

The record in this matter does not establish that the Beneficiary met the requirements of the labor certification as of the visa petition's priority date. Therefore, we will affirm the Director's denial.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.

Matter of C-F-P-, Inc., ID# 29600 (AAO Mar. 29, 2017)